The images in this collection have been produced for the purpose of safeguarding and empowering children. We would like to see them widely used both in individual work and in the development of new materials.

All images may be freely used and adapted for use with individual children and young people and in the development of packs and materials for the purposes outlined above.

Packs that are to be distributed not for re-sale should include the following copyright statement:

"These materials use images that are owned by Triangle, the NSPCC, Blackwell Publishing and Widgit Software Ltd, which are made available for educational and social support purposes."

The agreement of the individual copyright owners is required before these images or guidance notes may be used in the development of materials that are to be published. Acknowledgements

This project could not have happened without the energy and commitment of a wide range of people. More than 100 disabled and non-disabled children and young people (ranging in age from 20 months to 20 years) have contributed to the project, as have many parents and professionals.

We would particularly like to thank:

• the children who completed questionnaires at home:

Amelia, Amy H, Amy J, Amy HG, Belma, Benedict, Benjamin, Billy, David, Ellie, Frazer, Grace, Hana, James, Jamie, Joel, Leah, Miere, Millie, Oscar, Phoebe, Ruby, Ruth, Sara, Subira, Tegan and Wandia.

Triangle's consultative group of children and young people:

the 58 children in the different group settings involved at pilot and trial stages:

Addington School, Alfred Sutton School, Crescent Under 5's Nursery, the ICAN Nursery and Carden Infants School, Little & Mini Digits at the Mackeith Centre, Tunmarsh Centre Nursery.

• The Advisory Group:

Kate Adams, Helen Cockerill, Merry Cross, Tom Cummiskey, Cate Detheridge, Tina Detheridge, Helen Edwards, Mike Kennard, Louisa Makolski, Ruth Marchant, Kay Meinertzhagen, David Miller, Claire Richardson, Nina Sethi, Margaret Walker, Holly Williams.

Kay Meinertzhagen for the drawing and redrawing of the images, Kate Adams for the design, Mike Martyn and Cate Detheridge for technical assistance.

Maureen Carson, Mike Stacey, the NSPCC Specialist Investigation Service Team North West, Catey Mulcahey, Marcus Page, Gretchen Precey, Mary Noble, Polly Dyer and Jeff Mesie for advice.

We would like to thank the NSPCC for funding and supporting the project from its early beginnings through to its completion and to thank Widgit Software Ltd and Blackwell Publishing for giving us permission to use their images.

Introduction

This image vocabulary was developed to support children to communicate about a range of important issues. It is designed to be used as a flexible, child-centered resource. These guidance notes introduce some key principles and ideas and help you find your way around the images.

Why the images were developed

There are widely recognised gaps in existing symbol vocabularies. These gaps both reflect the social position of disabled children and contribute to their increased vulnerability to abuse. In Triangle we have worked with many children who have a wide symbol vocabulary but are missing some of the basics that we feel are essential, for example:

- Children who have more than 20 symbols for body parts but no symbol for bottom (or any other private body part).
- Children who can communicate about the national curriculum but cannot say 'leave me alone'.
- Children who have 15 different colours in their communication system but can't ask for a cuddle.

The vocabulary gap also means that adults working with disabled children face additional and unnecessary difficulties in respect of child protection. We know of experienced child protection investigators who resort to freehand drawing of new symbols for children when investigating concerns about possible abuse, which creates serious questions about the safety of the evidence.

These new images are designed:

- to support children to communicate about their feelings, their bodies, their rights and their basic needs
- to assist adults to work with children on these issues
- to enable children, when necessary, to communicate about abuse in evidentially safer ways
- to enable adults, when necessary, to investigate concerns about children's safety in more evidentially valid ways.

How the images were developed

Children and young people from 20 months to 20 years were involved in a six-month project, working alongside a multi-disciplinary group of professionals and parents.

We put the vocabulary list together by looking at gaps in existing symbol systems, and drawing ideas from children's books, children's language, research literature and the knowledge of experienced practitioners. Twenty-four young children worked with their parents to build the vocabulary list and develop the images for some of the more sensitive areas.

An experienced symbol designer and members of the Triangle team then worked alongside children in various settings. This included disabled and non-disabled children and young people across a wide age range and from a variety of ethnic and cultural backgrounds. Some children were involved in the design stage, helping to think about images, and producing or commenting on initial drawings. Other children were involved in testing the images, they were asked to guess what different images might mean, and asked to draw or make suggestions for ways to represent the more challenging ideas.

Introduction

Who is this vocabulary for?

The images were designed primarily for children already using Augmentative and Alternative Communication Systems (AAC). We hope they may also be useful for other children.

Children with speech and hearing learn most of this vocabulary by the age of about seven (from their peers as well as from adults), though much of it is learnt earlier. For very young children, some of the personal care images (nappy, potty, wee, poo) or some of the feelings (hot, cold, cross, happy) may be most relevant.

The images allow children to be negative ('I hate you'), to assert themselves ('it's not fair', 'it's my turn') and to describe a range of touches (tickle, rub, squeeze, hug) including painful things that may have happened to them (hit, smack, kick). Much of this vocabulary has been previously unavailable to children using AAC.

How to find images in the booklet

There are 383 images available in the set. They are divided into five sections:

- Feelings
- Rights and safety
- General vocabulary
- Personal care
- Sexuality

If you are searching for a specific image you can search in the Contents page under the relevant sections headings (as listed above) or in the index.

You will notice that some words have several images. This is because different images may be more or less meaningful for a particular child. You might like to offer different images to the child and see which they choose, or you may already have a clear idea which would suit them best. There are no absolute right or wrong meanings for any image.

Equally, you will see that some images have several words or phrases. This is to make it easier to find what you are looking for, and also to encourage you to use words familiar to each child, especially when first introducing the images.

The images are available to download from www.nspcc.org.uk/inform/howitis and also at www.nspcc.org.uk/inform/howitis and also at www.nspcc.org.uk/inform/howitis and <a href="https://www.nspcc.org.uk/inform/howitis and <a href="https://www.nspcc.org.uk/inform/

How should the images be used?

For children already using AAC, these images can be included in their existing systems, adapted if necessary. They need to be taught and introduced in the same way as other new symbols or images.

For children not using AAC, we hope these images may be of value in:

- supporting the PSHE curriculum
- teaching about emotional literacy, rights and safety
- involving children in assessments, reviews and planning
- involving children in research processes
- · ascertaining and representing children's wishes and feelings
- investigating concerns about children's welfare and safety
- working therapeutically with children in a range of contexts.

How should the images be introduced to children?

If you are introducing new vocabulary to a child, it is essential that you know them well and are aware of the vocabulary they have already mastered as well as what they appear to understand but have no vocabulary for yet. Remember we all learn to recognise and understand vocabulary before we can use it ourselves, so it is quite likely that there is vocabulary in this set which your child is ready for.

Begin with teaching the simplest, most concrete ideas, not least to give the child encouragement. Make sure you give the child a chance to use the words in their own sentences before adding any more. It is vital they can USE the vocabulary, not just recognise it.

Children may need to be introduced to vocabulary in a context (that is within a few sentences or even a short story, or with physical examples) in order for them to grasp the context. Words like 'sting' and 'fluffy' might be examples. Also, some of the vocabulary represents quite complex ideas. Phrases like 'It's not fair' seem so common-place in the non-disabled world, that we can forget that there is much that needs to be understood in order to use them accurately.

If you are unsure about using any part of this vocabulary, we would encourage you to consult others: parents, speech and language therapists, teachers, whoever you trust most about communication.

Encouragement has been given to symbol producers to adapt these images to fit with their style. Rebus symbols for all these images have been developed in parallel and are included in the set. We are equally happy for anyone else to adapt them to suit a particular child's needs. For example, you might colour images in, or alter their size, or redraw them or combine different elements to make new images.

Please be aware that:

- Children generally understand more than they can express.
- Children's ability to use a drawing as representative of themselves or others matures in line with other representation-of-self skills – ie usually emerges at around 3.5 to 4 years.
- Children often learn vocabulary through a process of play, in which they may be more interested for a while in the sound of the word, or things it rhymes with, or the fact that it is considered rude. Disabled children need this opportunity too, and should not be discouraged from learning in this way. We may need to remind ourselves that they do not have the advantage of 'naughty', giggly conversations, or practising
 'rude' rhymes, out of the sight and hearing of adults.
- Non-disabled children make many mistakes with newly acquired words before being able to use them accurately. We tend to overlook this in the constant stream of their conversations, whereas mistakes are more obvious when a child must make a great effort and take a long time to produce a short sentence.
- In relation to the vocabulary about body parts and sexuality, it is particularly demanding of our wisdom to work out the boundary between appropriate experimentation and behaviour that should concern us. It is necessary to balance our sensitivities about sexual knowledge with the child's needs to have self-awareness and to be safe.
- Families differ across religious and cultural boundaries about what vocabulary is acceptable for children. The child's age, your gender and theirs, and other factors may also need to be taken into account.
- If you are not the child's parent, then there may be much you need to do before embarking on teaching some of the more sensitive vocabulary, and possibly some of the assertive vocabulary. This process may require you to talk to the child's parents or to community leaders.
- Within religions and cultures, families vary enormously as to how rigidly they interpret or adhere to norms. Some may require strict adherence by other family members, but may be willing to make allowances for a disabled child. Others may be generally more liberal or flexible about how they put their beliefs into practice.

Dialogue is vital, but our starting point is that every child has the right to learn to communicate about these ideas, not least to assist in keeping them safe.

Your feedback and comments

We do not imagine that this is the final set of images. We would welcome your comments, suggestions and ideas.

Guidance for explicit images

The images in this section (p62-65) may not be suitable for all children. We suggest you look through these before beginning to use them, and select with care for individual children and young people.

If you are using these images in child protection investigations, careful thought needs to be given to their introduction and towards ensuring questions are sufficiently open and offer alternatives. As part of the development process, we asked experienced interviewers about how young children and non-speaking children have communicated about abuse. We have included images for a range of words that children use when they don't know the 'right' word. For children being interviewed using AAC, it may be more appropriate to offer them non-specific images rather than explicit ones which could be perceived as leading or coaching the child. For example, although the image set includes 'erection' and 'ejaculation', for young children it may be more appropriate that they have access to the images for 'willy', 'hard' and 'squirt'. All are included in the set.

Reference must be made to the guidance outlined within Achieving Best Evidence in Criminal Proceedings: Guidance for Vulnerable or Intimidated Witnesses, including Children (Home Office, 2001). In particular we would draw your attention to Appendix G relating to disabled children. Care needs to be taken if images are to be introduced in the context of an investigation in order to avoid or minimise the possibility that they may lead or be considered to lead the child.

Triangle is an independent organisation providing training and consultancy throughout the UK, and outreach support to children in Sussex. Everything we do relates to disabled children and young people.

Most of our work is around inclusion, children's rights, child protection and communication. Triangle is advised by a group of disabled children and young people.

This image vocabulary was developed to help children to communicate about their feelings, their bodies, their rights and their basic needs. More than 100 children and young people contributed by drawing or commenting on images. On the front cover are drawings by a four-year-old of happy and sad emotions. The image below is by a five-year-old.
